REASON FOR TODAY'S CALL:

My garburator has not been working for almost two years. When I switch it on it makes a horrible loud rumbling sound. This happened after I put a small handful of pine needles that had come off a Christmas tree down it. I think a screw may have come out because I found one in the drain, but I'm not sure that the screw actually came from the garburator. Seems likely though. I stopped using it and haven't missed it. It's drain got really slow once, recently, and I cleared it with a plunger. However, a while ago it started leaking slightly, and recently it got worse. I can see it dripping now. It's not a lot of water, but I am getting worried about running my dishwasher as it drains into the same system. In the photo you can see the water dripping if you look closely.
